Contents

 Aims of the study The broad findings of the ESENER survey concerning worker representation on health and safety and on managing psychosocial risks Worker representation and consultation and psychosocial risks What is already known about worker representation in occupational safety and health: an international review of the literature What do we mean by worker representation and consultation? The coverage and effectiveness of worker representation on health and safety Characteristics of health and safety representatives Activities of worker representatives on health and safety Effectiveness Worker representation and psychosocial risks Summary Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data Stage 1: Worker representation Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables Comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles Comparisons by sector 	Fo	reword	7
1. Aims of the study 2. The broad findings of the ESENER survey concerning worker representation on health and safety and on managing psychosocial risks 3. Worker representation and consultation and psychosocial risks 4. What is already known about worker representation in occupational safety and health: an international review of the literature 4.1. What do we mean by worker representation and consultation? 4.2. The coverage and effectiveness of worker representation on health and safety 4.3. Characteristics of health and safety representatives 4.4. Activities of worker representatives on health and safety 4.5. Effectiveness 4.6. Worker representation and psychosocial risks 4.7. Summary 5. Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management 6. Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data 6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector	Ex	ecutive summary	9
 The broad findings of the ESENER survey concerning worker representation on health and safety and on managing psychosocial risks Worker representation and consultation and psychosocial risks What is already known about worker representation in occupational safety and health: an international review of the literature What do we mean by worker representation and consultation? The coverage and effectiveness of worker representation on health and safety Characteristics of health and safety representatives Activities of worker representatives on health and safety Effectiveness Worker representation and psychosocial risks Summary Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management Stage 1: Worker representation Stage 2: Health and safety management Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles Comparisons by sector 	Int	troduction	15 and safety and on managing psychosocial risks 3. Worker representation and consultation and psychosocial risks 4. What is already known about worker representation in occupational safety and health: an international review of the literature 4.1. What do we mean by worker representation and consultation? 4.2. The coverage and effectiveness of worker representation on health and safety 4.3. Characteristics of health and safety representatives 4.4. Activities of worker representatives on health and safety 4.5. Effectiveness 4.6. Worker representation and psychosocial risks 4.7. Summary 5. Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management 6. Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data 6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector	1.	Aims of the study	15
 4. What is already known about worker representation in occupational safety and health: an international review of the literature 4.1. What do we mean by worker representation and consultation? 4.2. The coverage and effectiveness of worker representation on health and safety 4.3. Characteristics of health and safety representatives 4.4. Activities of worker representatives on health and safety 4.5. Effectiveness 4.6. Worker representation and psychosocial risks 4.7. Summary 5. Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management 6. Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data 6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector 	2.		16
an international review of the literature 4.1. What do we mean by worker representation and consultation? 4.2. The coverage and effectiveness of worker representation on health and safety 4.3. Characteristics of health and safety representatives 4.4. Activities of worker representatives on health and safety 4.5. Effectiveness 4.6. Worker representation and psychosocial risks 4.7. Summary 5. Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management 6. Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data 6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector	3.	Worker representation and consultation and psychosocial risks	17
 4.2. The coverage and effectiveness of worker representation on health and safety 4.3. Characteristics of health and safety representatives 4.4. Activities of worker representatives on health and safety 4.5. Effectiveness 4.6. Worker representation and psychosocial risks 4.7. Summary 5. Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management 6. Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data 6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7. Comparisons by sector 	4.		18
4.3. Characteristics of health and safety representatives 4.4. Activities of worker representatives on health and safety 4.5. Effectiveness 4.6. Worker representation and psychosocial risks 4.7. Summary 2. Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management 2. Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data 6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector		4.1. What do we mean by worker representation and consultation?	18
4.4. Activities of worker representatives on health and safety 4.5. Effectiveness 4.6. Worker representation and psychosocial risks 4.7. Summary 5. Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management 6. Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data 6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector		4.2. The coverage and effectiveness of worker representation on health and safety	19
 4.5. Effectiveness 4.6. Worker representation and psychosocial risks 4.7. Summary 5. Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management 6. Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data 6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7. Comparisons by sector 		4.3. Characteristics of health and safety representatives	23
4.6. Worker representation and psychosocial risks 4.7. Summary 5. Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management 6. Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data 6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector		4.4. Activities of worker representatives on health and safety	24
4.7. Summary 5. Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management 6. Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data 6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector		4.5. Effectiveness	25
5. Methodological approaches to the further analysis of the ESENER data on worker representation and health and safety management 6. Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data 6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector		4.6. Worker representation and psychosocial risks	27
and health and safety management 6. Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data 6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector		4.7. Summary	28
6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation 6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector	5.
6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management 6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector	6.	Summary of the findings of the further analysis of the ESENER data	30
6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management 6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector		6.1. Stage 1: Worker representation	31
6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management 6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector		6.2. Stage 2: Health and safety management	33
6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables 7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector		6.3. Stage 3: Process, outcomes and inhibitors to OSH management	34
7. Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles 7.1. Comparisons by sector		6.4. Stage 4: The case of psychosocial risk management	36
7.1. Comparisons by sector		6.5. Stage 5: Corroboration with employee representative variables	42
many time of the contract of t	7.	Some comparisons between countries, sectors and regulatory styles
7.2. Comparisons by country and by regulatory framework type 4		7.1. Comparisons by sector	44
		7.2. Comparisons by country and by regulatory framework type	46

	Survey (WERS) 2004
	8.1.	Introduction
	8.2.	Structure of the analysis
	8.3.	Worker representation in the United Kingdom
	8.4.	Workplace characteristics and consultation
	8.5.	Representation, consultation and occupational ill health
	8.6.	Summary
9.	Som	ne comparisons with the European working conditions survey (EWCS) 2005 and 2010

8. A national case study — the United Kingdom Workplace Employment Relations

10. Conclusions: implications for policy and future research

11. References